Probably more than any other sport, gymnastics develops in the successful gymnast all the "best" physical, mental and moral virtues that make up the nature of a truly admirable person.

At the same time, however, it requires of the gymnast the best that he or she can deliver, before success can be achieved.

It is the aim of Warbutton's Gymnastics Academy/Meadowlands Gymnastics Training Center and its staff to develop the best gymnasts - CHAMPIONS - by providing its students with the best coaching experience and skill, the best training facilities, and the best competition where, after all, championship qualities emerge and are proved.

But, in the final analysis, the success of each gymnastics student rests within the gymnast himself or herself. The personal attributes demanded of the gymnast who wants to succeed are many. He or she first must have absolute desire to be best; or at the very least to develop gymnastic skills to the best of his or her ability. The gymnast must be truly dedicated to the sport and its training requirements...

determined to progress and improve continually. He or she must ... be strongly self-disciplined...; difficult to discourage... courageous (but never reckless) ... continually establish goals, and strive to achieve them... willing to accept coaching and training discipline... quick to comprehend... and carry out instructions and directions ... work with diligence ... be honest ... attentive ... obedient ... enthusiastic ... pleasant and cooperative with all classmates and teammates be a gracious winner ... but, more important, lose with the same kind of graciousness.

Other important elements necessary to the gymnastic student's success – elements that can not be stressed to strongly... are the sincere support, cooperation, and encouragement of parents.

When the student gymnast successfully puts together all of these attributes and elements in combination with his or her physical capabilities, then-win or lose- that individual has attained all the qualities of a CHAMPION.
